Statement of Significance

Last updated on - April 21, 2008

The building at the rear of 17 Murray Esplanade was originally built in 1878, probably as part of a boarding house providing accommodation for single men behind shops and hotels facing Little Hopwood Street and Murray Esplanade. Between 1887 and 1897 it operated as a brothel, which was almost certainly conducted by the licensee of the nearby Murray Hotel on Murray Esplanade.

This is a two-storey brick building with a weatherboard front facade, a corrugated iron skillion roof and a verandah and balcony along the front. It has six small rooms, each with a fireplace, three on each of the ground and first floors, separated by 9" thick brick walls internally, and all opening only off the verandahs. The building is unusual in that only two of the rooms have windows. The former brothel is historically significant as a rare known survivor of the many brothels which operated during the nineteenth century in most towns in Victoria, but which have seldom been recorded. It is significant as an example of the sort of accommodation once commonly provided for single working men and as an intrinsic part of the historical wharf complex at Echuca.
