Interpretation of Site	The low density artefact scatter is likely to represent domestic rubbish deposited sometime after the 1880s when Barwon Heads was first established as a township. The site is not currently associated with any former buildings. In the past, the site was used for sand extraction.
Archaeological Significance	There is a potential for discovery of further sub-surface artefacts which will contribute to a better understanding of late 19th and early 20th century domestic disposal patterns.
