Physical Description 1

A Queen Anne villa, mostly single storey but with a small attic storey. The building adopts the common hipped roof form with gable projections at two coordinate points. The verandah has provision for a deep valence (now removed) and full width flat arch brackets below. Walls are the expected red brick with render string courses and a rough cast dado in a wide below eaves band. The gable ends are half timbered, and the roof uses terracotta tiles.

The house is set well forward on the large block but the return verandah and the corner bay window, give it a strong corner emphasis which reinforces the substantial side garden.
