STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The former St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church is constructed of slop moulded brick erected in 1841/42 by contractors Sommerville and Marr. It is of paramount historical importance, being the first Presbyterian Church in Geelong, the oldest surviving brick or stone structure in the region, and the earliest documented work of Alexander Skene, the first architect/surveyor to practice in the town. Skene later became the Surveyor-General in Victoria, 1869-86, as well as being a noted colonial architect both in Melbourne and in Geelong. The two storey stucco rendered classical style building fronting the original church was erected in c1912.
