Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

The house at no. 6 Grosvenor Street, Moonee Ponds, was built for Francis Hurry in 1923. It is aesthetically distinguished (Crtterton E) in its area as a picturesque Arts and Crafts influenced bungalow in a garden setting, the use of symmetry being both highly representative of the movement and simply expressed.

Physical Description 1

A picturesque symmetrical Arts and Crafts influenced bungalow with dominant terra cotta tiled roof and attic storey, the dormer being placed centrally and given further emphasis with pressed metal window hood, additional elements including timber shingles and barges characteristic of the period. A shady verandah runs the length of the facade and is supported on massive brick and rough cast piers. The walls are of red brick with clinkers and rough cast upper sections, whilst the windows and doors are lead lit.

Integrity

Condition: Sound. Integrity: High, including garden with pergola reinforcing the symmetry of the bungalow and rock fence. Later garage.
