Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

Probably planted in the 1890s, the former Iona State School SS3201 elms are significant to the Cardinia Shire because of their age and maturity and as signposts to the former school site and in turn to the community which developed around it. As indicators of the school site the elms also are both an expression of the landscaping aspirations of this nineteenth-century farming locality and reminders of the many local people involved with this community centre over time.

The former school (now gone) was a typical and simple weatherboarded Edwardian building.

Three large elms remain on the site, possibly from the late nineteenth early twentieth-century, at what may have been the gate; the grounds are now overgrown.

Physical Conditions

Since the first inspection the school has been removed from the site.
