Why is it significant?

It is significant as a representative example of the transitional housing style known as the Federation Bungalow, which combined elements of the Federation-era 'Queen Anne' style and the Interwar 'Californian Bungalow style. The brick dwelling at 23 Holmes Street, Brunswick East, combines characteristics typical of the Federation 'Queen Anne' style (a steeply pitched roof pyramidal roof form, tiled roof with terracotta finials and ridge capping, half timbering to the projecting gable, a curved bay window with leadlight to the casement windows, and casement windows with leadlight) with characteristics more typical of the Californian Bungalow style (generous enclosed verandah with broad arched openings, tapered rendered columns over heavy brick pillars, and a half brick wall across the front). Chevron pattern brick detailing is notable to the brick wall and the front fence. (Criterion E)

Physical Description 2

This red brick bungalow is located on the western side of the street. It is set behind a large garden and original brick fence. The two-colour brick fence has solid brick pillars with a rendered top, a band of clinker bricks laid in a chevron pattern through the mid-section and a border of curved edged bricks running along the top edge.

Built in 1918, the house has characteristics associated with the housing styles of both the Federation era and the Interwar era, pointing to a transition in housing styles that occurred in the years following World War 1.

Features typical of the Federation 'Queen Anne' style include the steeply pitched pyramidal roof with projecting gable clad in tiles with terracotta ridge capping and finials that encloses the main form of the house and extends to form the verandah, the projecting wing to one side with a jettied half-timbered gabled front supported by timber brackets above a curved bow window that is divided into five equal casements with decorative leadlight to the upper sections and small leadlight panes to the lower sections, two brick chimneys with corbelling to the upper edge and shaped terracotta chimney pots.

The verandah arrangement is more closely associated with the Californian Bungalow style. The generous enclosed space has broad rendered arches over each opening and tapered rendered pillars over half brick piers at each end. A half brick wall runs across the front with detailing that matches the front fence (brickwork has been overpainted).
