Physical Description 1

This row of hybrid oaks (closer to Quercus robur, Common or English Oak than Quercus canariensis, Algerian Oak), listed on the National Trust Register of Significant Trees, extends along the north side of the Princes Highway from Magid Drive to the east of Webb Street. Despite the removal of the parallel row on the south side of the highway, the oaks today are an impressive feature of the landscape. Individual trees appear to be in uniformly good condition, with wide, evenly distributed canopies. The simple granite plinth memorial (See History) is located at the north-west corner of the Webb Street and Princes Highway junction.
