Banyule, Buckingham Drive, Heidelberg, was built for overlander and grazier Joseph Hawdon in several stages. The first section, dating from c1842, is the single storey wing constructed of clay and locally quarried stone. The two storey main house was completed by 1846 and is constructed of stuccoed brickwork on stone footings. Asymmetrically composed, the design is characterised by its gabled parapets and corner pinnacles, bay window and porch, chimneys and prominent string courses.

Banyule, Buckingham Drive, Heidelberg, is a house of paramount architectural and historical importance. The house is one of the oldest surviving houses in the State and is probably the earliest mansion (still standing) in Victoria. The house has considerably historical associations. Architecturally the house is in the very rare Tudor Gothic Revival style, is finely detailed and is one of the important examples of the Gothic Revival in the State. Later alterations have not lessened the importance of the building.

Banyule, Buckingham Drive, Heidelberg, is in current use as an arm of the National Gallery of Victoria. Various additions and alterations have been made during the last and this century.
