Statement of Significance

Last updated on - February 7, 2005

The Commercial Travellers' Association Building was constructed in 1913 to designs by the architects H W & F B Tompkins, winners of a competition which included some of Victoria's most adept designers and was judged by Percy Oakden, one of Victoria's most distinguished architects.

The building is a distinctive, early and near original example of the Edwardian Baroque style. It is one of Australia's first group of steel-framed buildings and notable for its introduction of glazed white bricks to the facade. It was the first building to be constrained to the later all-pervading "limit height" incorporated in the Melbourne by-laws. In addition it was notable as the second Victorian (possibly Australian) headquarters built for the once powerful Commercial Travellers' Association and is now the oldest surviving, in a location intimately associated with their work. The Commercial Travellers' Association Building possesses an interior which is both notable (domed entrance hall) and innovatory (metal ducted heating and ventilation, laundry chutes) and is still expressive of the once numerous body of commercial travellers and a disappearing way of life.
