Statement of Significance

Last updated on - June 8, 2006

Group Classification for complex of buildings begun in 1936. The complex of buildings and additions which comprise Prince Henry's Hospital reflects the changing philosophy in modern hospital architecture over a period of more than twenty years. From the interlocking brick forms of the Pathology Wing (1937), to the modern classicism of the eleven storey cream brick central block (1936-40) which was in 1940 the tallest building in Melbourne, to the International Style Outpatients Wing on St. Kilda Road and Nurses Home in Wells Street, all designed by leading hospital architects, Leighton Irwin & Co, Prince Henry's Hospital is an important Melbourne institution and landmark. Before its name change in 1934 Prince Henry's was known as the Homeopathic Hospital and has been located on this site since 1885.
