Statement of Significance

Last updated on - July 26, 2005

This local landmark was erected by George Clayfield, a prominent builder who constructed many significant buildings in Daylesford, using bricks from his own local brickworks.

This substantial two-storied corner building has robustly detailed bluestone lintels and steps along with distinctive brick venetian windows which are important details in the neatly designed elevations.

The side door has a particularly delightful decorative border of projecting bricks.

The building was opened in 1875 as the New Colonial Produce Store by the owner, John Howe, a prominent early settler who became a Justice of the Peace and Mayor of Daylesford.
