Physical Description 2

part 39-49; ground level changed, part verandah enclosed; MMBW Detail Plan shows; corner site; Lewis: 38-` A continuous terrace framed by two three storey buildings, designed by Charles Laing and built in 1856-58 by Hugh Glass. Glass lived in number 45 in 1863 for 1 year only. Number 49 was used by doctors and surgeons continually from 1858-1900.

The terrace has undergone subsequent modifications : The first addition appeared to be in 1863 when the ground floor waiting room was added to the corner terrace. In about 1868 each house was extended to the rear boundary - a configuration which has basically remained unchanged to the present day. In 1874 additions and alterations were carried out to the rear of the corner terrace. In about 1881 a facelift was carried out, as verandahs were added at first floor level and cast iron work (identical to that on "Barcelona Terrace") was applied. Additional Italianate decoration in stucco and parapet balustrading was also added.

From 1881 to the present day the only significant changes have been the unsympathetic enclosed verandah treatment to two houses and roofing in at the rear yard on another terrace.'

Physical Description 1

The terrace is substantially intact externally on both the front and the rear despite the 19th century verandah additions.² The terrace is designed to be sympathetic with Glass Terrace (64-78 Gertrude Street) and hence forms an important element in the development of the area.³ The terrace forms an integral and important element in both the Brunswick Street and Gertrude Street streetscapes.⁴
