The former Bell and Lorimer Store, 24 Kings Avenue, St. Arnaud, makes a significant architectural and visual contribution to the streetscape. Believed to have been built in the 1860s for Bell and Stewart, this largely intact building was originally known as Bell and Stewart's General Store, and soon after it became Bell and Lorimer's General Store, which consisted of a grocery, ironmongery, and wine and spirit merchant business.

The former Bell and Lorimer Store is architecturally significant at a LOCAL level. demonstrates original Victorian qualities which include the two storey composition and the dominant parapet with a projecting cornice surmounted by flanking urns. Other intact qualities include the incised rectangular title panel under the parapet,

Stewart was also one of the Councillors elected to the first municipal Council of St. Arnaud and he was twice Mayor. Also associated with the building was James Bell, who later became Sir James Bell, an M.L.C. from 1881-1889, and who succeeded Sir James Lorimer as the Minister of Defence in 1889.

The former Bell and Lorimer Store is socially significant at a LOCAL level. It is recognised by the St. Arnaud community as one of the 19th century commercial buildings in the town originally owned by the well-known and prominent owners, James Stewart, James Bell and later, James Lorimer.

Physical Description 1

The former Bell and Lorimer General Store, 24 Kings Avenue, St. Arnaud, makes an important architectural and visual contribution to the streetscape.

The two storey, rendered brick, Victorian building is characterised by a parapet with a projecting cornice and surmounted by flanking urns. Under the parapet is an early incised rectangular title panel which reads: "Victoria Bitter Foster's Larger". The four bayed composition of the first floor is denoted by the regularly spaced and early single timber framed double hung windows. Introduced wall signage between the two central windows reads: "Fraser's Licensed Grocer." Another distinctive feature of the design is the early skillion verandah clad in galvanised corrugated iron with early valence hoarding. It is supported by introduced round steel columns with a decorative, introduced valance. The ground floor has early timber framed shopfronts with ingoes and early timber and glazed doors at one end, and early window and door openings at the other end.
