Physical Description 1

DESCRIPTION

This large gabled hall has weatherboarded (bullnose profile) cladding, chamfered boxed or slatted eaves (fire prevention), a new corrugated iron roof, and added skillion rooms to the north and west sides. Four timber framed windows are in the east wall and two in the south wall, along with the double entry doors. All windows have security screens. Inside the lower walls are lined with strap-jointed hardwood and fibre cement sheets, with plaster sheet above, and polished T&G boards for the floor. The ceiling (previously pitched?) is flat, flush plaster. Slatted bench seats or forms line most walls with an associated chair rail. Mot doors are flush panel (once ledged & braced, vertical boarded?).

Integrity

Skillion form, weatherboard clad wings have been added to the north (two bays) and west sides (three bays), each with highlight window strips covered with security screens. Similar screens have been added to the main hall openings along with an open porch at the side entry. Precast concrete toilet block has been added to the north-west of the hall, 1960s, replacing the typical weatherboard clad type.

Inside the hall stage (used for concerts, dance bands) has been removed from the north end (termite attack) and the kitchen skillion refitted.

Context

The hall is set beside a large car park, among gums, between the Plenty Park reserve and the Plenty State School: it is at the centre of the Plenty village. It was once a prominent focal point for travellers going west along the Van Yean Rd, until the construction of the fire brigade building.
