Interpretation of Site Current buildings are relatively lightweight with a considerable amount of open space.

Archaeological Significance There is a potential for the site to produce features and deposits relating to the 1877 residence. It is likely the house was occupied by someone who worked at the local tannery.

Historical Significance The potential remains of the 19th century house, possibly associated with the industrial use of the area. Remains may also demonstrate the development of Footscray Township.

History

The Josephs Road precinct lies just north of the Footscray township reserved, surveyed in 1849. Development of the precinct occurred after the railway line and bridge were constructed in the 1850s. A sugarbeet distillery was constructed in the 1870s, as were tanneries and residences housing workers for the various industries.

This place/object may be included in the Victorian Heritage Register pursuant to the Heritage Act 2017. Check the Victorian Heritage Database, selecting 'Heritage Victoria' as the place source.
