Interpretation of Site	The site most likely represents a domestic rubbish tip associated with the domestic dwelling that once stood on the same block. The artefacts observed from teh tip could easily be from teh 1850s to 1920s period, possibly even a little later.
Archaeological Significance	This is a collection of mid to late 19th century domestic artefacts. Due to ths, and that disturbance has occured to the site in the form of ploughing, tree planting and fencing, the archaeological significance of this site is low.
Historical Significance	The surface artefacts appear to represent the standard domestic items of the period. Some historical background research into the occupants and the use of this area would be beneficial to build more complete history of the region. However, the general historical significance of this site is low.

History

The property was originally purchased by T. Briggs & J. Robinson in 1858. A house is said to have once stood on the property and this artefact scatter is most likely to be associated with the domestic rubbish generated from the house occupants. The house construction period and demolition are unknown.

This place/object may be included in the Victorian Heritage Register pursuant to the Heritage Act 2017. Check the Victorian Heritage Database, selecting 'Heritage Victoria' as the place source.
