Physical Description 1

The red brick and plaster house is of interest for the polygonal bay window tower on the east and for the ionic columns and flat-roofed verandah on the Sturt street elevation. The building is basically a turn of the century Queen Ann style house of intersecting hips and gables. The tower has narrow windows at ground floor level and is marked by broad plaster bands and is capped by a slimmer octagonal tower with a slim round arch headed openings in each side surmounted by a copper cupola rising to a finial. The verandah of classic details sits rather awkwardly across the gable end of the building. The ionic columns support a plain architrave and the frieze is plain, save for rosettes above the columns. These are surmounted by a cornice.
