The symmetrical timber house is of note for the elaborate screen of coloured glass at the end of the central passage. Ehen viewed through the front door the screen is back lit and is alight with red, yellow and green glass. The house would appear to have been constructed early this century and has had two bow windows of three separated by slender colonnettes with simple scalloped timber blind hoods over each window. The bow windows terminate in a gable with vertical timber decoration. The entrance is marked by a timber arch.
