Interpretation of Site	This homestead site was made initially from locally available bricks from quarry 250m southeast of house. The weatherboard structure was built later, extending the brick section. Handmade brick was also used at rear steps and for the kitchen chimney so it seems likely that the weatherboard section was not built very much later.

History

The house was the original house built on the property in the late-19th C by Blake. The brick section of the house along with the chimney and back steps were built from locally hand-made bricks from a quarry on the nearby hill which also supplied civic structures in Korumburra.
