Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

77 Gladstone Street, Kew, is of local historical and architectural significance as a representative and externally relatively intact example of a symmetrical single-storey double-fronted timber Victorian cottage with a slate roof and featuring a block-fronted timber facade and decorative cast iron verandah. The house features unusual gabled pediment-like elements incorporated into the roof at eaves level and into the verandah roof.

Physical Description 1

The house at 77 Gladstone Street, Kew, is a single-storey double-fronted timber cottage on a symmetrical plan. The hipped slate roof is finished with bracketed eaves and a single red face brick chimney with moulded caps. Located on the eaves line of the principal elevation is a pair of gabled pediments, altered with the introduction of cladding within the gable end. The facade is block-fronted and the walls elsewhere are finished with conventional weatherboard. The facade is screened by a full-width skillion-roofed verandah with timber posts and cast iron frieze and brackets and the entrance is marked by a third pediment, echoing those in the main roofscape; the gable end is finished with a carved screen. The centrally located entrance contains a panelled timber door and is flanked by two windows with timber-framed double-hung sashes.

The front boundary is unfenced and the house is largely obscured by native garden.
