Physical Description 1

It is a timber building with a double gable roof traversing the site. The walls are clad in weatherboards and the roof is corrugated iron. It is a typical mid nineteenth century structure. Decorative elements include the barge boards and the short finials at the gable roof ends. The front elevation has been completely altered. It now has a prominent gable with strapwork and shingles and is supported by brick piers and timber columns. The front elevation may have been altered during Paul Noske's occupancy as the style is consistent with the 1920's.
