B Listed - Regional Significance

This 1900 villa has regional historical significance as an example of the substantial timber Edwardian residences built on elevated site for Geelong's more affluent citizens, and for its associations with William Purnell and Sons, a notable Geelong firm of timber merchants, builders and architects. It is one of a number of such houses built as investments by this firm "Warranmurra" at 32 Laurel Bank Parade (1894) is another.

"Strathcona" has architectural significance at state level for its unusual and particularly evocative Edwardian appearance and context. Significant elements include the very complex roof forms, the wavy balustrade timbers and rising sun motifs. The dense romantic garden, fence, corner gate and outbuilding garage are also significant in completing the ensemble.

Physical Description 1

DESCRIPTION

An Edwardian timber house, with very complex roof forms, with bracketed eaves and turned timber finials. There is a 45% splayed corner rectangular bay, with wavy balustrade timbers and conical domes octagonal roof over the bay terminating the verandah. The rest has gables embossed with a rising sun motif and with an arched lattice valance. It has very dense romantic old garden with several mature trees and old rockeries. There are two timber garages facing (21) Mercer Parade. Much of the old fence has been replaced (presumably in replica) but some of the old fence remains, overgrown with mulenbeckia. It has a splayed corner Edwardian gate with turned timber spindle rails.
