Veterans Description for Public

The Swanpool Avenue of Honour is located on the Midland Highway. The Avenue consists of thirteen Bunya Bunya Pines (Araucaria bidwillii) planted to commemorate the First World War. Planted in 1920, Bunya Bunya Pines were an unusual choice of species for a commemorative planting as Australian natives are not commonly used. The idea for the Avenue originated when local Swanpool residents contacted the first director of Melbourne Botanical Gardens, Baron Ferdinand von Mueller. At their request Mueller collected some Bunya Bunya seeds from Queensland and returned them to Swanpool to be grown into the Avenue of Honour. As of 2011, the Avenue was in a good condition with twelve of the original fourteen trees planted still intact.

In Australia, commemorative trees have been planted in public spaces since the late nineteenth century. Arbor Days were held regularly in most Victorian State Schools during the late 1800s and early 1900s, and numerous trees were planted in parks in Melbourne and throughout Victoria to mark the visits of important and famous people.

This tradition of commemorative planting was continued in 1901 when at the end of the Boer War trees were often planted for each soldier of the district who was killed in South Africa. These plantings, however, rarely consisted of more than two or three trees in each town.

During and after the First World War avenues of honour consisting of trees lining significant streets became a popular form of commemoration. They represented a new egalitarian approach to the commemoration of soldiers where rank was not a consideration: each tree symbolises a person.

Avenues of honour are a uniquely Australian phenomenon. Australians, and in particular Victorians, embraced the idea of planting them more enthusiastically than any other country in the world. Dating from May 1916, the Eurack Avenue of Honour is the earliest known avenue of honour to be planted in Victoria.

By the time of the Second World War avenues of honour had declined in popularity as a means of commemoration. Today it is estimated that over 300 avenues of honour have been planted in Victoria to commemorate service personnel since 1901.
