What is significant?

The house at 82 Gardner Street, Richmond is significant to the extent of its Edwardian fabric. It is an interesting, four-bay, timber, single-storey, Edwardian house, with very unusual massing. It is clad with ashlar pattern board, has a hip-roof and a boundary wing-wall at the right, with a vermiculated corbel block. Beyond this, the roof is set forward at right, as a hip, then further as a long gable. There is a skillion-verandah in the angle of these, at the left, extending across the front, beneath the gable. There is a bay-window in the angle between hips, with a mini-ripple skillion-roof. Chimneys have roughcast-band and render-moulds, with terra-cotta pots. The upper gable is roughcast, timbered and jettied on fretwork brackets. The deep verandah valence is wavy palisade, on tulip fretwork brackets and turned posts. At the front it has a deep dentilated arch; beneath is a rectangular casement bay. The entry door has side and fanlights. Beside is a half-round window, with landscape scene in leadlight. Non-original alterations and additions are not significant.

This place is also within the Gardner Street Precinct.
