The plaque stand close to the spot where he built his ice making factory, the first in Australia, when it opened in 1859. J Harrison (1816-1893) was born in Scotland but spent 28 years in Geelong. He was the first man in the world to sell large scale commercial refrigeration machines to industry. By 1855 he had built a colonial prototype in Geelong. On Feb 19, 1859, he opened the nation's first iceworks in Geelong. He later built two other factories in Melbourne and Sydney. In 1873 he made the first attempt to ship frozen meat to England. The venture failed because of a defective pump.

He was a printer by trade, the founding editor of the 'Geelong Advertiser'. He is buried in the Western Cemetery.
