DESCRIPTION

The white-painted, timber framed, late Victorian residence has projecting gables on the north and west elevations, and is clad in weatherboards. It has a hipped and gable corrugated iron roof and two brick chimneys. It is sited in a corner block, with mature trees on the west boundary, and originally it would have commanded views of Port Phillip Bay and the Reserves

The north and west elevations feature a bull nosed return verandah, with decorative cast iron frieze, fringe and brackets, turned timber posts, timber floor boards and corrugated iron clad roof. There a decorative timber eave brackets in pairs under the eaves on the west and north elevations, including the gable projections. The north elevation has an ornate timber door with sidelights and decorative architraves, and a timber frame window. The north projecting gable has a central double -hung window and sidelights with simple timber decorations. The west elevation has two windows, and a timber door facing north leading from the verandah to the gable projection. The west end is similar to the north projecting gable.
