B Listed - Regional Significance

The former Balmoral Hotel of Fyansford, a single storey brick structure, symmetrically disposed in a picturesque Gothic Revival style by Architect Walter Ferrier, was erected in 1854 for publican James Roger Miller. This hotel with prominent end gables, central verandah and double lancet timber windows, is located at the site of the crossing place of the Moorabool River and adjacent the junction of Barwon River. The area of Fyansford, originally Fyans Town, was an important early Victorian settlement with three hotels erected by 1855. The Balmoral Hotel has been considerably altered by mid 20th century renovations, but the original form is intact.
