Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

151 Brackenbury Street (1940?) is of local architectural and historical significance as a particularly intact characteristic work by the local female builder, Alexa Goyder. It exemplifies her creative contribution to the building tradition of Warrandyte and its system exemplifies what is described by Robin Boyd in Australia's Home (1952) as "the Warrandyte Style".

Physical Description 1

The house at 151 Brackenbury Street, Warrandyte has a broad skillion roof, painted red and constructed of sandstone random rubble basework, with vertical creosoted lapped boards above (like a paling fence), with a wide flashing skirt over the stonework.

Comparable to the houses built by Alexa Goyder at 119 and 139 Brackenbury Street, 300-02 (for herself), 306 (part), and 32 Mullens Street (part). Also comparable to the houses built by Myrtle Houston at 314 and 318 Yarra Street. Other women builders in the City include Meg Henderson (1960-64) and Inge King (1951-56).
