Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

The former Congregational Church at no. 246 Ascot Vale Road, Ascot Vale was built in 1885 and extended in 1902. It is important for its capacity to demonstrate the manner of worship of the Congregationalists since absorbed into the Uniting Church (Criterion A) and as a late nineteenth century and Federation period church in the Gothic Revival mode, occupying a prominent position in the Ascot Vale Road streetscape. The symmetrical facade treatment and banded arch faintly recalling the preceding era of structural polychromatic work are important stylistic elements (Criterion E).

Physical Description 1

A small polychrome brick church with later additions at the front and rear but distinguishable by its twin lanterns and buttressed side walls with segmentally arched windows and leadlight work. The facade is in the Gothic Revival mode with red body bricks stuccoed enrichment and cream ("white") bands, the voussoirs to the main windows arch being also banded. The arrangement is symmetrical with a low narthex and surmounting gable to the rear set back. The original entrances have been boarded up.

Condition: Sound. Integrity: High (externally).
