Physical Description 1

An asymmetrically planned, face red brick and stucco Italianate styled villa, with a cast-iron decorated return verandah, a slated hipped roof and a parapetted tower over the entrance. Strong arch motifs visually link the entry with adjoining windows. The balustraded panels used, below sill level, in both house and tower windows, also occur in the tower parapet. Coloured brick and cemented string-moulds, eaves bracketing and vermiculated panels comprise the ornament. The tower has unusually applied pilasters, visually compressing the window opening.

The verandah has been renovated c.1915-20, with the addition of a brick balustrade and lead lighting; the cream brick string-moulds have been painted; extensive (visible) additions of an unsympathetic form but in matching brickwork at the rear; and a fence added more recently.

The house forms part of a precinct of late nineteenth and early twentieth century houses. The tower and corner site lend prominence, whilst adjoining houses of a similar period complement the house.
