Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

Architecturally, an austere and typical Early English church design, made more distinctive by its all-stone construction in an area known for bluestone production.

Physical Description 1

Bluestone and Early English Gothic Revival in style, the former church is typical of many small parish churches of its period, its wall material being (in this city) also typical of the surviving dominance of the local stone industry. Embellishments such as the carved stone corbel table over the buttressed entrance are of value. The adjoining timber residence evokes its period and hence the ministry of the Rev. Scott.

Integrity

External Integrity

Given its relocation, the assumed timber picket fence has been replaced and chain-wire gates erected across a new concrete side driveway.

Physical Description 2

Streetscape

Most adjoining houses are late Victorian and Edwardian in character and, despite its relocation, the church is related to them in period.
