Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

Built as a weekender just after World War One, Mt. View is significant to the Cardinia Shire for its links with one of the district's more modest resorts and adds a specific type of house to the variety of near original housing and gardens in the district. The house is also significant for its comparative age among other Cockatoo houses, rarity as a type (i.e. a weekender in Cockatoo, now a commuter suburb). It is also a reflection of past now discontinued activities in this part of the shire.

Physical Description 1

This gabled weatherboard house has a skillion-form hipped front verandah which is ornamented with a slatted frieze and fretted brackets and returns down one side. A gable at the centre of the verandah provides more detail and a simple finial. The roof is clad with corrugated iron.

There are tree-ferns along the front of the house but otherwise there is a large lawn expanse between it and the frontage. A later out-building stands to one side of the house.

A plan of a 1920 weekender built by Hill & Frost shows a large living room, backed by a kitchen and flanked by bedrooms. A verandah was one three sides with a part enclosure at one end (bathroom?)

(see D Griffin collection)

Physical Conditions

The verandah balustrade has been replaced with rails (once slatted?) and the side verandah possibly built in.
