Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

The property at 34 Mercer Road, Armadale is a double storey boom period dwelling constructed from 1888.

It is of note for its severely executed facade of superimposed orders and elaborate mouldings in stucco. It is of some additional interest for its associations with noted chemist Sir .David AC Rivett. The residence is of local significance and warrants continued protection under the City of Stonnington planning scheme.

Physical Description 1

The subject site is located on the east side of Mercer Road in Armadale. It is a two-storey boom period dwelling constructed in rendered brick. It is notable for its facade which comprises an unusual and comparatively rare arrangement of four arcuated, bays each rising through two stories and separated by half round columns. The building retains balustrades at the first floor and parapet levels.

The building is currently painted white but otherwise appears to be in good condition and reasonably intact to its exterior. A number of additions and outbuildings are believed to have been constructed to the rear of the building. No examination has been made of this section of the site.
