The Gables is a notable domestic example of the Gothic Revival style. The house is one of only a small number of late 19th century private houses in Heidelberg and Ivanhoe to express a strong Gothic Revival influence.

Relatively few substantial brick villas were constructed in the Banyule area in the late 19th century, the 1880s land boom having little effect on the settlement pattern of the district.

Physical Description 1

BUILDING: The Gables is an eclectic example of the 19th century domestic Gothic revival style. The building is of bichrome brick, with horizontal bands of red and brown brickwork. Its king post trusses and square-head, trefoil-crowned window-bay, illustrate the Tudor and Gothic Revival, whilst the rendered chimney cornices and striped chimney cappings reveal the Italian influence. The timber bracket detailing of the verandah features sunburst piercing. A brick fence has replaced what was probably a picket fence, but an iron shed survives to the south of the house.
