Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

The domestic terrace pair at 11-13 Cromwell Road is of regional significance as a distinguished and substantially intact example of high Victorian design. The quality and integrity of the cast iron and stucco work to these buildings, along with elements such as the tessellated tile paths and verandah floors, contribute to their distinctive appearance and overall significance.

Physical Description 1

11 and 13 Cromwell Road is a pair of Victorian terrace houses located in the area between Malvern and Toorak Roads. They are set in a quiet tree lined residential area.

Each property is approached by way of a modest garden enclosed by a cast iron fence and gate, typical of many Victorian terrace houses. Overgrown plants partially obscure no. 11 from the street. Each house has a pair of entrance doors to its ground floor facade - one grand, one standard - in itself an unusual feature. 11 Cromwell Road has been divided into two flats. One flat uses the lesser entry as its front door, accessed via a central bitumen path. The other flat is accessed by the main front door on the south side. The two entrance doors to 13 Cromwell Road are still intact, as are the original tessellated paths to the verandahs of both terrace houses. On both verandahs, the paired columns and enclosed frieze cast iron work are significant features and embellish the facade, creating an exotic, filigree character.[1] The cast iron to the fences came from the Phoenix foundry, Elizabeth Street North, and it is likely the decorative iron to the verandahs and balconies also came from this source. The fenestrations of the terrace houses are symmetrically distributed and the balcony has fine lacework in the balustrade. The parapets of both houses conceal the roofs from views in the street.

Externally, the terrace houses are substantially intact, however, both are in need of maintenance and the fence of 11 Cromwell Road is in need of repair. The Prahran Council Building Permits has no record of major alterations made to 11 Cromwell Road,[2] since records began after World War II. 13 Cromwell Road was altered in 1978[3] and this may have included the brick paving to the front garden to permit two off street car parks.

The architect of 11 and 13 Cromwell Road is not known. The richness of the ornament in these terrace houses has attracted suggestions that these terraces are the work of Norman Hitchcock[4], but this is only speculative. Hitchcock lived and worked predominantly on the opposite side of the city and retired in 1895[5], shortly after these terrace houses were built, factors which seem to weigh against such an attribution.
