Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

"Halstead" is regionally important as a surviving large villa from the early Victorian (1850's) period, offering insights into the lifestyles of the privileged in Caulfield at that time. The later tower is of architectural interest for its use of Medieval Romanesque enrichment.

Physical Description 1

A single storeyed stuccoed villa with symmetrical east facing facade having a central hipped roof section with gable ended pavilions and timber posted verandah with cast iron frieze and spandrels across the facade. The gable ends are distinguished by oculi and finials and there are symmetrical chimney stacks. A two storeyed tower with attic floor is situated at the north-west corner of the main villa. It has a slate mansard roof with cast iron railing whilst the frieze, round arched openings and corner treatments of the stuccoed tower have Medieval Romanesque details.
