Archaeological:

Possible very high potential for evidence of 1890-80's German subsistence farming comparable with Lehraoung farm to the north and Westgarthtown German towns. Deposits may be sealed by fill-or else damages by bulldozers. Recommend watching brief to determine this.

Cultural:

Rare early German subsistence farm related to important local groups- Zeibel, Lehmann.

Scientific:

Floor plan of house and farm buildings and domestic and agricultural may reveal evidence of ethnic adaptation and/or cultural transference.

Aesthetic:

Dense exotic deciduous trees provide distinctive landscape unusual in this area.

Interpretation of Site	The site was established in the mid 19th century as one of a number of related early German farmsteads. It appears to have been abandoned as an occupation site c. 1950 or earlier as farms amalgamated. Land subdivided in 1970's for large residential lots.

History

Originally granted to Gottloh Seidiel (1853) as part of the larger Lot 4 but split in 1860 with Lehmon taking northern part and Christian Seefen (?) having the southern part until 1902; his probable referred to 'real estate' valued at 400 pounds includes 48 acres with five roomed store buildings occupied by William Nebel (see Survey Report by Debney Et. Al.).
