Statement of Significance

Last updated on - May 11, 1999

What is significant?

The Old State Nursery Office is a diminutive two storey timber building, hexagonal in plan with an encircling verandah at both levels. The building was designed by John Johnstone and constructed around 1911 by Adam Coulson, a carpenter employed by the Forests Commission.

How is it significant?

The Old State Nursery Office is architecturally, aesthetically and historically important to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

The Old State Nursery Office is architecturally significant as an extraordinary example of a purpose built State Nursery building. It utilises local, natural building materials and demonstrates influences from the Shingle and Stick designs popular in America at the time. The building is the oldest purpose built structure connected with forestry education in Victoria and it has a distinctive form which became an icon for the forestry profession. The building is aesthetically significant for the way in which it expresses a utilitarian function in a picturesque manner. The Old State Nursery Office is an important example of a building type, which is picturesque yet still manages to provide function and form. The fountain and landscape elements are of significance for their contextual relationship to the building and for their ability to express an aesthetic appreciation of forestry practices in Victoria.

The Old State Nursery Office is historically important for its associations with the development of the forestry industry in Victoria. The building is part of the Creswick Sawpit Gully site which was initially developed as part of a strategy to establish State Forests and Timber Reserves in Victoria. After the School of Forestry was established in 1910, (housed in a former hospital), Creswick became known as the 'Home of Forestry'; the Nursery produced stock for forest plantations and operated as the technical arm of the school. The Old State Nursery Office represents the emergence of a commitment to forestry education and practice in Victoria and is of significance for its pivotal role in the practical aspects of nursery management.
