Significance of Individual Property

Historically important for its associations with Arnot Tolley, whose eventual role as chairman of the Myer Emporium Board was in a time of vigorous expansion of that firm into suburban centres: of State importance.

Architecturally, similar to the Harry Norris house design for G. J. Coles in Toorak, this house has the then fashionable Moderne styling perhaps as a sign of both men's involvement with the marketing of new trends in their stores: of potential regional importance.

HO192 Reid Estate, Balwyn

The Reid Estate, Balwyn, is an area of heritage significance for the following reasons:

- The large detached houses which adopt a range of interwar architectural styles and demonstrate a high quality of architectural design (particularly those constructed during the 1930s). This architectural quality is combined with the visually unifying factors of lot and frontage size, materials, and uniform set backs to create a cohesive and notable interwar heritage precinct.

- The place contains individually significant buildings in a range of interwar architectural styles, which have highly publicised associations with successful building designers, see, for example, Basil Hayler's houses in Highton Grove.
- The housing types and styles physically demonstrate the appeal of Balwyn as one of Melbourne's most fashionable new suburbs on the 1930s. This status was maintained in the development of areas further north and to the immediate east after 1945.
- The place is a generally intact interwar landscape containing concrete roads, mature gardens and street trees, and some original fencing.
