Statement of Significance

Last updated on - January 1, 2008

Taringa is of local historical significance. The house was built by the Glenroy Land Co, as part of the first suburban subdivision of Glenroy in 1887-88. The house has associations with the locally prominent Wiseman family, being the residence of Arthur Wiseman's son in law, Edward Strickland.

Physical Description 1

Taringa is a rendered brick single storey Italianate villa with a hipped slated roof, cast iron return bullnose profile verandah and a bay window with double-hung sashes. The entrance elevation has rendered quoining and timber bracketed eaves. The original verandah floor has been replaced with concrete and the picket fence has been removed. A Canary Island Date Palm (Phoenix Canariensis) dominates the front garden.

Key Architectural Elements:

Single storey rendered brick Italianate villa; original slate roof; Canary Island Date Palm (Phoenix Canariensis) in front garden.

Conservation Guidelines: reinstate original verandah floor surface
