Statement of Significance

Last updated on - January 1, 2008

The mature exotic plantings on the east side of Moreland station are of local significance as early plantings, possibly contemporary with the adjacent railway station. The trees contribute significantly to the heritage character of the street. The palms represent typical railway station plantings of the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Physical Description 1

This reserve adjacent to the Moreland Railway Station comprises a number of mature specimen trees located on the east side of Moreland Station, interspersed with more contemporary native plantings.

The site is dominated by two mature English Elms (Ulmus procera) at the northern end, and three mature Canary Island Date Palms (Phoenix canariensis) towards the southern end of the reserve. Other vegetation within the reserve is predominantly native, and of fairly recent origin.

Potential Threats:

Removal of the exotic vegetation in favour of a completely native scheme. Failure to replace senescent Elms or Palms with the same species or further introduction of native vegetation, reducing the heritage character of the place. Elm Leaf Beetle and Elm Bark Beetle are both serious pests of Elm Trees, capable of causing major damage and even killing mature trees. As yet, Dutch Elm disease is not known in Australia.

This place/object may be included in the Victorian Heritage Register pursuant to the Heritage Act 2017. Check the Victorian Heritage Database, selecting 'Heritage Victoria' as the place source.
