A terrace of six large two storey houses built 1883-85 for John Gordon, slate merchant. Gordon owned the premises until 1902. The two storey rendered brick structure has a two storey cast iron verandah. Each house is punctuated by a pedimented name plate on the parapet.

Gordon terrace is typical of boom style domestic architecture. Composed of six repetitive elements, it is of interesting length and enhanced by the stepped form following the slope of the site. The individual pedimented name plates are notable. The terrace is a prominent part of the Carlton Street and Gardens precinct and a typical example of a building type which is a distinctive feature of inner suburban Melbourne.

The cast iron palisade fence is compatible with the terrace.
