Statement of Significance

Last updated on - January 3, 2007

Classification extends to facade only and the subsequent ground floor alterations are excluded. Statement of significance: A seven storey showroom and office building of 1934/35 by architects Oakley & Parkes; notable for its early use of spandrel stainless steel panels in its facade which represent a departure from the forms of classically derived styles developed in the decade prior to the Second World War and a significant technical innovation.
