A pair of terrace houses of 1860 refaced later in the century by Norman Hitchcock in his characteristic heavy High Victorian style, with a large parapet pediment containing areas of vermiculation and flanked by Hitchcock's typical enormous scrolls. The windows and floors of the arcade below treated as mannerist tabernacle compositions, each with a key stone in the flat lintel and above this a pediment, which is supported on either side on small blocks. These are supported in turn by consoles and finally on Tuscan pilasters.
