Statement of Significance

Last updated on - August 2, 2005

Traralgon Hotel was erected in 1914 for Mrs M Hoare to replace an 1858 structure. The two storey hotel is located on a corner site and has a double storey verandah over both footpaths. Construction is in face brickwork with hipped corrugated iron roofs. The bull-nose verandah has decorative iron balustrades, brackets and a segmental gable at the angled corner. Segmental brick arches and the chimneys are features.

Traralgon Hotel, has historical associations and is architecturally notable as almost, if not the very last, example of the typical nineteenth century hotel built, complete with verandahs. Whilst essentially Victorian in form, the hotel exhibits details of its period, loosely derived from the English Queen Anne style. Examples are the segmental window arches, roof forms, chimneys and their arrangement.

Traralgon Hotel is reasonably intact and in good condition.
