A cottage and associated structures of interest as illustrating the lifestyle of the Irish smallholders and the background of the Kelly Gang, whose grandfather, James Quin(n) probably built the house in about 1855-56: the cottage retains some original features, including roof palings, fragments of wallpaper, and a chimney crane. The other buildings are an adjoining weatherboard structure of later date, a brick homestead and bluestone dairy which are also later, and a horizontal slab barn of indeterminate age.
