Statement of Significance

Last updated on - July 21, 2008

Leahy's former residence is of State significance because: constructed initially as a residence and then converted to a hotel to take advantage of the passing trade to the goldfields, it is able to provide valuable information, and thus is of particular significance as a rare example of an extant Gold Rush hotel; of the likelihood that it is a surviving example of an 1840s building, rare within the State of Victoria; and it is able to provide a continuum analogous with that of the State, in relation to not only the changing usage of the building, but also its relationship to such as the Irish enclave which existed in the area and the industries such as that of flour and saw milling, and cheese manufacturing, which were located within its vicinity.
