Statement of Significance

Last updated on - January 14, 2008

This building was originally built about 1860 for Mark Tucker and Robert White, undertakers and cabinet makers. The wide opening in the front was originally used for housing the hearse. With economic downturn, the building was leased to Dr. William Loftus for use as consulting rooms. The stone building became the home and surgery of Captain John Baird, the garrison doctor in 1876 and was also used as a dispensary. After Dr Baird's death in 1891, Mark Tucker's wife, Thirza, assumed ownership and undertook renovations which replaced the carriage doors with 3 large, round-headed windows. It was used thereafter as a residence, general store and produce shop. The single storey structure features a gabled roof and dormer windows and the large opening in the main facade is an unusual and distinctive feature of this probably early building.
