Statement of Significance

Last updated on - June 4, 2004

The Mt Kaye-Mt Coopracambra Region is of national botanical significance due to its species and biogeographic diversity, and to the large number of rare, endangered restricted or otherwise significant species or communities. The Genoa River Valley is possibly of international significance because of the archaeological evidence contained in geological exposures, and displays geomorphological features of national importance. Catchment and land system values are of at least State significance due to the potential for scientific research. Outstanding scenic and landscape values further enhance the significance of the area.

Note" Classified boundary varies from Coopracambra National Park boundary.
